DEEP-DIVE COACHING ANALYSIS

Athlete: Tucker Lloyd
Week of: Feb 9–15, 2026
Context: First official weekly recap

A. MINDSET STRENGTHS

1. Strong Structure & Responsibility

Tucker handled:

- Classes consistently
- Football work daily
- 10-hour plumbing shift Saturday
- School work Sunday
- 2 lift days

This is not a low-output week. It shows:

- Work ethic
- Schedule discipline
- Functional time management

There is no avoidance behavior present.

---

2. Goal Alignment

His weekly goals:

- Gym 3x
- Not skip class
- Do good at work

He:

- Hit gym twice (slightly under target)
- Attended all classes
- Took pride in work output

This indicates:

- Intention is present
- Follow-through is close
- Standards are reasonable

---

3. Early Bullseye Understanding

His Bullseye breakdown:

- Can Control: God, family, school, work
- Can Influence: What others think through actions
- Can't Control: How actions are interpreted

That's a solid intellectual understanding of control vs interpretation.

However:
He listed values (God, family) rather than behaviors (effort, posture, response, preparation).
This tells me he understands the concept, but hasn't internalized the behavioral layer yet.

B. PATTERNS & BEHAVIOR THEMES

Pattern 1: Quiet Performer

He works.
He produces.
He doesn't emotionally narrate much.

This is typical of:

- Internally driven athletes transitioning to coaching roles.

Strength: Stability
Risk: Bottled pressure

Pattern 2: Confidence Still Tied to Output

He highlighted:

- "Got paid good money"
- "Got a lot of gear from work"

That's subtle, but important.

His reward system is external validation-based:

- Money
- Gear
- Recognition
- Stand out for coaching role

This ties directly to his intake:

- Fear of failure

- Confidence goal

Confidence currently = performance + recognition.

We need to shift it to:
Confidence = consistency + controllables.

Pattern 3: Slight Habit Drift on Lower-Structure Days

Neutral days:

- Tuesday
- Friday
- Sunday

Common theme:
Less structure → lower score.

This means:
He thrives when externally scheduled.
He needs stronger self-led anchors on lighter days.

That is a self-leadership growth opportunity.

C. BULLSEYE METHOD DIAGNOSIS

Dominant Ring: Middle Ring (Influence Zone)

His competitive goal:

"Trying to be the best I can at work for football to standout to get a coaching role."

This is Middle Ring focus:

- Stand out
- Get role
- Influence perception

Nothing wrong with that.
But it can leak into Outer Ring if not managed.

Subtle Outer Ring Drift:

Concern about:

- How actions are interpreted
- Standing out

Reframe:
He controls:

- Effort
- Energy
- Preparation
- Initiative
- Attitude

He does NOT control:

- Timing of opportunity
- Staff decisions
- Perception speed

Next step is behavioral Bullseye clarity:
“What did I control today that builds trust?”

D. WIN THE DAY PATTERN ANALYSIS

He recorded:

- 4 Wins
- 3 Neutral

Estimated weekly score range:
Likely ~23–27 range → Mixed Week (14–27)

This is exactly where a first-week athlete should land.

Breakdown:

1. Intention → ✅ Strong

Clear weekly goals.
Daily engagement.

2. AM Promise → ⚠️ Slight inconsistency

Gym goal was 3.
Hit 2.

This is small — but this is where confidence lives.

3. Adversity Response → Neutral

No emotional events reported.
No visible reactive behavior.

However:
No evidence yet of intentional reset moments either.

4. Progress Over Perfection → ✅ Good

No shame language.
No dramatic tone.
Stable.

5. Gratitude / Self-Compassion → Limited

He acknowledged achievements but didn't reflect on effort quality.

Depth still surface-level (Developing Phase).

E. GOAL ALIGNMENT CHECK

Original Program Goals:

- Build confidence
- Build better habits
- Become better overall person

This week:

- Habits: Developing
- Confidence: Still performance-based
- Identity: In progress

He is exactly where he should be.

He is a Developing Phase athlete trending toward Consistent if habits lock in.

F. ONE CORE COACHING PRIORITY

One core priority for Tucker next week is:

Turn gym attendance into a non-negotiable identity anchor.

Not because lifting matters.

Because promise-keeping builds confidence.

Small promises kept daily will remove fear of failure faster than motivation ever will.